Later on in the sermon the foreign here anarchist came in for some of the same treatment. "We've got a dirty, rotten gang in this country who brought their dammable continental custom of Saphath breaking and a pack of personal liberty lies with them, and every dron of blood in their dammable continental custom of blood in their dammable continental custom of Saphath breaking and a pack of personal liberty lies with them, and every dron of blood in their continents. come here with tags pinned on their toats, waving their red flag of anarchy and shouling their infamous doctrines. Possibly the announcement that with next Sunday's collections the entire campaign expenses would be taken care of had something to do with Billy's good apirita. The money question, involving as it did expenses of $150,000, rested rather heavily on the managers and with the whole thing practically cleaned up a big sigh of relief went up all around. The only other collection outside of next Sunday's will be Thursday's, when the contributions will be divided between the city police and firemen's funds.

His sermon in part follows:
"In these days of rapid changes in all departments of thought and life, in spite of our belief that Christianity recessarily implies democracy, and that its precepts are the only foundation upon which democracy can logically develop, or upon which it can thrive and endure, there are many things to cause nilsgiving to the observing student of the tendencies of the time. It is also evident that the Church of Jesus Christ does not count as a practical influence in affairs of State. No one pretends that Christianity, as such occupies an unchallenged position in the civilized world, or that it is the one great inspiring force in the individual and communal life of Christendom. Hence, there are many who openly declare that civilization is a failure and that there are no certain indications that the future will be better than the past.
